PREFACE.

The scope of this compilation is defined with tolerable accuracy by the wording of its title, yet a word of explanation may be useful. Having its origin in the wish of the compiler to form and possess a respectable collection of Lincoln literature, it grew in a leisurely way out of his efforts to ascertain of what such a collection should consist. It had thus accumulated to nearly its present dimensions with no thought of giving it to the press, when its value to others similarly engaged became so obvious as to suggest that they, as well as librarians and special students of the civil war period, would welcome its publication. The matter has therefore been diligently revised and extended, and a small edition is offered to those who may be willing to share the cost of printing.

As intimated, the list embraces only such publications as, broadly speaking, may be called literature, to the exclusion of some other things in printed form classed as Lincolniana. Single-page prints almost without number, relating more or less directly to Mr. Lincoln, were issued in all stages of his public career and, notably, during the season of mingled grief and rage which succeeded his assassination. These, consisting of portraits, cartoons, badges, cards, circulars, posters, broadsides, and the like, though possessing a degree of historical significance, shed no appreciable light upon the person to whom they refer, nor do they disclose the opinions of any known individual concerning him. Issued for the most part anonymously and with nothing upon them to determine time or place of publication, they are not susceptible of description in bibliographical terms, falling within the category of curious relics rather than the department of letters. Hence no place is made for them in the present catalogue.

Neither is it attempted here to present an index to all that belongs legitimately to the literature of the subject. A great number of articles, many of them of the highest value, appear in scores of periodicals to which no references are given. The Poole indexes measurably supply this lack and must suffice until some one with the requisite time and patience shall give to it more particular attention. With two or three intended exceptions, also, collections of biography and similar books containing separate Lincoln matter but devoted in part to other topics, are omitted. The engagements of the compiler have not permitted him to undertake the exploration of this important field. And to these must be added the vast general literature of the Civil War, in all of which the great War President necessarily holds a central place.

This list, then, deals exclusively with books and pamphlets, including in the latter class everything that approaches to the dignity of the brochure. And it embraces only such of these as pertain wholly or chiefly to the man, his acts and utterances, his character and services, his life and death. Nothing has been inserted without a reason for thus classifying it, nothing intentionally omitted within the limits prescribed.

The utmost simplicity of treatment has been preferred, even to the eschewing of the Latin phraseology made familiar by bibliographical usage. In most instances (always when practicable) the title-page has been transcribed entire, and such further information given concerning each publication as will make its identification easy and certain. The occasional notes and cross-references are introduced mainly in aid of the same object. The temptation to subdivide the list, by placing the various classes of writings in separate parts, has been resisted in the belief that a special bibliography, such as this is intended to be, is best adapted to the general need when all its contents are arranged under one alphabet. The order is of course determined by the names of authors, editors or compilers, when known; otherwise, by considerations of convenience to users. The number of anonymous titles assembled under the principal name, though considerable, is not deemed a serious objection in comparison with any more artificial scheme of arrangement. Pretending, however, to no more than amateur skill in this difficult science, the compiler submits his work to the better informed with unfeigned diffidence.

Invaluable aid has been rendered by Maj. William H. Lambert, of Philadelphia, a diligent collector and student of Lincolniana, and himself the author of a thoughtful and eloquent delineation of Lincoln's life and character. So freely and amply has he contributed, indeed, that mere prefatory acknowledgement is hardly adequate. He should be accorded the rank of collaborator—but with full exemption from responsibility for faults of plan and method, in which he has had no part.

Indebtedness is also acknowledged to the "Memorial Lincoln Bibliography," published by Andrew Boyd thirty years since, and long out of print. The special list of sermons, orations and eulogies occasioned by the death and funeral of the President, which forms the first and most valuable part of that work, is due to the industry and skill of Mr. Charles Henry Hart, and is altogether admirable. Following so shortly upon the tragic event, it is surprisingly full; far more exhaustive, no doubt, than would be possible if the work were now for the first time attempted. With the cordial consent of the author the information so laboriously gathered by him has been largely drawn upon for the enrichment of these pages.

In these closing days of the century which gave Abraham Lincoln to the world, it is the common thought of all who are called upon to speak in his honor that nothing remains unsaid, all the resources of eulogy being quite exhausted. But the writer may be pardoned for feeling that a most impressive eulogium is uttered in the simple bringing together of this remarkable collection of more than eight hundred distinct issues of the home and foreign press, each of which has that unique man for its principal theme. Washington and Franklin are the two earlier Americans about whom most has been written. The public life of each covered a period of full fifty years, and both died more than a century ago. Lincoln lived in the public eye but six years, and barely a generation has elapsed since his death; yet already the volume of printed matter concerning him very nearly equals all that has been published about both of his distinguished predecessors. No other man since Shakespeare has evoked a personal literature so copious, varied and brilliant. As a son of the Prairie State from which Lincoln came, and a boy-soldier of the Union which Lincoln so deeply loved, the compiler of this monograph rejoices that he is privileged thus to contribute, in an unobtrusive yet effective way, to the continued and increasing fame of his great compatriot and commander.

Minneapolis, November 15, 1900.

"It cannot be said there is any exaggeration of his worth. If ever a man was fairly tested he was. There was no lack of resistance, nor of slander, nor of ridicule. The times have allowed no State secrets; the nation has been in such a ferment, such multitudes had to be trusted, that no secret could be kept. Every door was ajar, and we know all that befell.

"Then what an occasion was the whirlwind of the war! Here was place for no holiday magistrate, no fair-weather sailor; the new pilot was hurried to the helm in a tornado. In four years—the four years of battle-days—his endurance, his fertility of resources, his magnanimity, were sorely tried and never found wanting.

"There, by his courage, his justice, his even temper, his fertile counsel, his humanity, he stood an heroic figure in the centre of an heroic epoch. He is the true history of the American people in his time. Step by step he walked before them; slow with their slowness, quickening his step by theirs; the true representative of this continent; an entirely public man; father of his country, the pulse of twenty millions throbbing in his heart, the thought of their minds articulated by his tongue."

—From Emerson's Funeral Address.
